. . losing all your information. . . The easiest way to get that serial number back is to insert a rapture 2) if you try to register on Rapture with a serial number from a rapture 1.0.x installation, you'll get an error saying: { $error } - Registration failed, probably because this is not a valid serial number for Rapture. This is a good reason to make sure you install Rapture in a supported method. Dotz Notifications in Rapture 1.0.8 On September 3rd, there was a critical bug that was being silently triggered by a set of users on the Rapture 1.0.8 runtime (and earlier 1.0.x versions). If you installed Rapture 1.0.8, you were immediately being sent a notification on any channel you were subscribed to, including any channels that you had set up using the registration dialog. This included channels that did not yet have their voice file set up (those are the ones you should be able to log into with the API), channels with a very small list of users, and channels that had the "show as avatar" option turned on. This happened because the API was not handling a failed registration well. When the user was asked to register, the API would return error codes to the client, as if the registration was being completed successfully, but this was not the case. The error code from the register was simply ignored, and then the API would check the number of "registrations" every 5 seconds (with a sleep that was set to 5) and send a notification if any registrants appeared. This was causing a huge amount of spam across the network. The fix for this bug was to change the way that registration was being handled. If the registration was canceled, the API would not do the check on "registrations". This has fixed the spam, but has also disabled the part of the API that allows you to set your voice file, because "registrations" is now always being returned with an empty body. The fix for this will be to send a notification when registrations are canceled. This means that when you are asked to register with a serial number for Rapture 1.0.x, it will not return the error when the number is not valid. A fix for this is coming soon.
